Leader’s Guide
How to use “Church Staff Evaluations” by BUILDING CHURCH LEADERS

Welcome to BUILDING CHURCH LEADERS: your complete guide to leadership training. You’ve purchased an innovative resource that will help you assemble a church staff evaluation. Selected by the editors of Leadership Resources at Christianity Today International, these are the best components of numerous evaluations, which come from a variety of churches and denominations.

We have assembled eight forms that you can use to evaluate your church staff. You may use any form as it appears in this training packet, or you may customize them for your particular use.

The forms range from helping a staff member establish and review his or her goals and objectives to reviewing specific roles such as musicians and administrative staff. The “Staff Performance Evaluation” looks at job efficiency and will help a supervisor to evaluate almost any kind of staff position.

We hope these forms will assist your church in making staff evaluations a smooth and helpful process.

Preliminary Steps for Church Staff Evaluations

Help your staff make the grade.

by Stephen Dees

Many employers, especially churches, consider the topic of staff evaluation a nuisance. Comments often include: “We don’t have time to worry with evaluating our staff,” or “Staff evaluation is a waste of time,” or “Our staff do a great job so we don’t need to evaluate them.”

Staff evaluation doesn’t have to be a nuisance. It can be a necessary tool that assists churches in critical areas of personnel management. Churches that have a good staff evaluation program in place often see the morale and work ethic of their employees improve dramatically.

Communicate Effectively

Here’s a typical church office scenario: It’s 8:00 on a weekday morning. The phones are ringing faster than they can be answered. Church members Maybel Johnson and Francis Smith have just arrived at the office and are asking to see the minister of music. The senior pastor walks through the church office and praises the receptionist for an excellent job on typing his sermon outline for the previous Sunday’s service. Sounds like a normal workday, right? But the problem is, the receptionist was so busy trying to answer the phones and point Maybel and Francis in the right direction that she thought the pastor was criticizing her typing of the sermon notes. Maybel and Francis, on the other hand, felt offended because the pastor didn’t say anything to them.

Cases of communication failure similar to the above scenario happen every day in churches across America and underscore the need for a formal staff evaluation system.

It’s no secret that communication is a two-way process. It requires the attention of both parties involved. Communicating approval or disapproval of an employee’s performance requires a distraction-free setting. Both the employer and the employee involved must be tuned in to what the other is saying.

Clarify Job Descriptions

The first step in creating an evaluation instrument is determining what role each position plays. This is most often called a job description. To be effective, staff evaluation instruments must be directly linked to each employee’s job description. After all, it isn’t fair to evaluate an employee based on criteria other than his or her job description. Unfortunately many job descriptions aren’t kept up to date. As employees are added and responsibilities are divided, job descriptions need to be updated.

In addition, staff members often need clarification regarding the expectations placed on them. People normally try to live up to expectations, so these need to be clear. According to Church Staff Evaluation: A Tool for Effective Performance by Joyce Parchman (Nacba Press, 2001), job descriptions help prevent misunderstandings, create a feeling of trust, and make it possible to present a great deal of organized, pertinent information about each position quickly and concisely.

Provide Staff Opportunities for Growth

Most employees want to know how they can do a better job. Regular staff evaluations provide this information to them. The key is to connect analysis to development. To do this, both the supervisor and employee should assess the employee’s strengths and weaknesses and bring this assessment to the evaluation meeting. Compare the two lists, and use the issues you differ on as a springboard for discussion, goal setting, and growth.

Growth becomes a reality only when both parties agree on a set of goals that will enable the employee to improve. Once an agreement is reached, it is the supervisor’s responsibility to provide opportunities to help reach those goals, which may include training seminars or classes.

Establish a Compensation Plan

Many churches give all staff members, regardless of job performance, the same annual compensation increase, which is usually a percentage based on inflation rates and/or the church’s current financial condition. This method may require less time and energy, but it also fosters numerous staff issues.

If you give the same increase to all employees regardless of performance, consider this: Using the across-the-board percentage method doesn’t encourage mediocre employees to try harder, and it doesn’t persuade top-notch employees to keep up the good work. Author Jerry Jensen, in Employee Evaluation: It’s a Dirty Job, But Somebody’s Got to Do It (The Grantsmanship Center, 1980), says, “People feel good about themselves and their employer when they do things that stretch their abilities and when they get recognition for those achievements.”

If you desire to improve employer–employee communication, clarify job descriptions, train staff for growth, and provide a means by which your church can compensate objectively. The process of creating and implementing a staff evaluation program should rank high on your to-do list.
